

Home-office feng shui

Clear your home for a strong future

A good feng shui consultation should be easy to understand and practical to implement. At Funk & Feng we only make suggestions that are relatively simple to do and will always offer several alternatives of changes that can be made to create your desired outcome. We also strive to give suggestions of 'cures' that will fit in, if not enhance your current interior design.

Many successful businesses in Australia are run from home-offices. It's imperative to set up your home-office in a professional and highly-organised way even if you don't have customers coming to your home. Funk & Feng can help you balance all the areas of your home, so that your home supports you and your family's goals and aspirations.

It's also worth having your business name and logo (if you have one) assessed to check that it will excel in your chosen field.

Why use feng shui?

Feng shui looks at the energy patterns or movements within a space. Ideally we create an environment that nurtures our wellbeing and supports our values and desires. Often correcting the feng shui of a space is closely related to making a change psychologically, so that our thoughts are put into action and we are left with a tangible reminder in our home or workplace of where we want to be or how we'd like our lives to be.

What cures are used?

Feng shui 'cures' can be created using colour, changes in layout to your home or home-office as well as the use of symbols and images to help inspire you and energise your home.

We also like to create cures that will enhance the interior design of your home. A really great feng shui cure in effect should be 'invisible', that is it's totally integrated into your home so that a visitor would not even know that you've had a feng shui consultation done. They'll just feel like they're in a great place. And of course practicality or common sense is the number one priority when working with feng shui. There's no point hanging a wind chime or placing some crystals if you just need a plumber to come in and fix a leaking tap!

Cultural appropriateness

The practice of feng shui began in China several thousand years ago and many cultures around the world have similar systems for clearing and creating good spaces. It's important that cures used are appropriate for the culture that they are used in. So whilst a Chinese good luck charm may do wonders for an Asian family, it may not have as much power for a Greek family. Therefore the feng shui cures that are suggested by Funk & Feng can usually be interpreted many ways to achieve an outcome that is meaningful to the end user.

How long does it take to notice changes?

At Funk & Feng we don't promise that your life will be instantly transformed by making feng shui adjustments, however changes can occur very rapidly, especially if you're committed to your success and know the reasons why you are making changes to your environment.

It's also very important to be clear about what you would like to achieve by having a feng shui consultation done so that you are able to measure the tangible successes of your consultation.

Is good design good feng shui?

A lot of good design also has good feng shui, however just because something looks great it may not necessarily be providing good feng shui or 'good support' to the occupier. Often what passes for good design may be very draining or hard to manage over the longer term. Take for example an open plan kitchen that opens out onto a garden. It may look great in a magazine but a house with this type of kitchen will find it challenging to 'hold' energy in the house as all the wealth that they are creating is going straight out the doors as soon as they make it.

Saying that, we don't go overboard putting beds or other furniture in weird positions to try and satisfy some invisible grid that ignores the walls of your home. Remember, if it's not a simple practical cure than it probably won't last very long and it won't change your life. Just like making any other changes in your life, it needs to be simple and sustainable in order for you to be able to integrate it fully.

In fact you will probably forget soon enough that you even made the change as the new layout will seem so much more natural...
